DOBSON UNVEILS 345-MEMBER “WOMEN FOR DOBSON” COALITION COMMITTED TO FINAL PUSH FOR CAMPAIGN

The Caroleene Dobson for Congress campaign unveiled on Monday a new “Women for Dobson” grassroots coalition comprised of 345 female leaders, community activists, and others who are committed to pushing voters to the polls in the final week of the campaign.

Among the women participating in the effort are current and former elected officials, experienced grassroots leaders and organizers, and even political novices who said Dobson inspired them to get involved in a campaign for the first time.

Ronda Walker, who represents District 3 on the Montgomery County Commission, said Dobson understands and supports the issues that matter most to women in Alabama and will work to protect the fundamental values that families care about.

“As women, mothers, and community members, we understand what’s at stake in this election. Caroleene Dobson represents the pro-family values that we know are needed in Congress,” Walker said. “She listens to the concerns of women and knows how important it is to have someone in Washington who stands up for our families, our faith, and our future.”

Sallie Garrison, a former director of the Eufaula Chamber of Commerce and a tireless volunteer in her community, said Dobson’s intelligence and commitment to finding workable solutions to the problems that plague our nation attracted her to join the campaign.

“I am proud to support Caroleene because I have witnessed firsthand her knowledge of the issues and her commitment to fix them. She clearly understands the needs of our district and has the intelligence, energy, and dedication to make a difference,” Garrison said. “I appreciate the interest she gives every citizen in this district including those communities both small and large. I know Caroleene will bring practical, common-sense solutions to Washington for our Alabama families. I am thankful she has chosen to run, and I look forward to casting my vote on November 5th.”

Debra Davis, who operates a cattle farm with her husband in the Shellhorn community located just outside Troy, said Dobson’s genuine concern for others sets her apart from other candidates for elected office.

“Caroleene Dobson isn’t just another candidate—she genuinely cares about the challenges we face, whether it’s the rising cost of living or balancing work and family,” Davis said. “I’m proud to support her because she understands our struggles and has the experience and integrity to represent us well in Washington. I believe in Caroleene, and I am confident she will be a powerful voice for Alabama families.”

Dobson said she appreciates the commitment that the coalition members have made to her campaign and believes their support is essential to a victory on November 5.

“The fact that these very busy women are willing to devote their time, energies, and efforts to help my candidacy is humbling,” Dobson said. “By working together, we can fix the broken system in D.C., prioritize the issues that truly matter to the residents of the Second Congressional District, and bring better days ahead for all Americans.”
